Coexistence bears no relation to resemblance.

This exhibition holds seven practices that resist a common language within a single space; each remains within its own material, its own form, its own time. Privileging neighborliness over harmony, this arrangement aims to establish a proximity that neither dissolves into the other nor cancels it out.

The exhibition does not attempt to gather around a theme, but to test whether difference can stand side by side. It is an arrangement in which each work sustains its own logic to the end, and yet - or precisely because of this - makes contact with the others. Material differs, scale differs, intent differs; the exhibition space does not smooth over these differences but renders them visible.

As a practice EArt repeats every summer, Summer Edition continues to bring together artists of different generations and different modes of production under one roof, as a ground of encounter that has itself become habitual. With its fifth edition, this ground is carried a step further; coexistence becomes an arrangement that no longer requires commonality - unhierarchical, and left unresolved. Summer's own condition of transition, its unfinished, not-yet-settled time, provides the natural terrain for this arrangement.

Taking the season's sense of transition and dynamism as its focus, Summer Edition reopens art's gathering potential for reconsideration - this time along the axis of rendering difference visible, rather than unifying it. Vol. V offers a multilayered visual field formed by divergent voices standing side by side - an exhibition not of harmony, but of encounter.
